

For the Children

W. E. D. Stokes, Jr.,
the Boy Inventor.

William E. D. Stokes of New York, though only twelve years old, has made a name among wireless experts by an invention. He designed what is called a "receiving box." This contrivance not only catches dispatches sent in the ordinary code used by the Marconi and De Forest systems, but reproduces the words and sounds of wireless telephony in volume deep enough to be heard at a distance of several feet from the apparatus. Working alone on the roof of his father's hotel in New York, the youngster made his important discovery. Recently he attracted attention at Washington, where he appeared before a senate committee in opposition to a measure to prevent any but authorized companies from taking wireless messages from the air.

Fox, an Outdoor Game.

This is suitable for a boy's game and is better played out of doors. A space is marked out for the fox's den, and the fox and the rest of the players use their handkerchiefs—knotted at the end if they prefer—in attacking each other. Fox, to show he is ready to begin, shouts out, "Twice five are ten." The others call, "Fox, fox, come out of your den." Fox comes out hopping on one foot and trying to hit any of the players on the back with his handkerchief, hitting him if they can. If fox while hopping succeeds in striking any player the one he becomes fox and is driven to his den by the handkerchiefs of the others. After reaching the den he may give warning and hop out as the other one did.

Should fox in his efforts to hit his enemies lose his balance and use both feet he is driven home under the blows of the handkerchiefs.

The Game of Post Town.

This is an interesting game for children of nine or ten who know something of geography and are familiar with the names of places. One is chosen postmaster. Each child takes the name of any town she prefers. If there are too many for the postmaster to remember he writes down the names and holds the list in his hand. He then calls out, "I am going to send a letter from Richmond to Boston," for instance. The children bearing the names of the towns mentioned exchange seats. If they fail to do so the one who does not respond pays a forfeit. Occasionally he exclaims, "General post!" Then every one must exchange places. If any one does not secure a seat she must pay a forfeit, and these are redeemed when the game is over. Excitement is added if long postal routes, including many cities, are named.

Forbidden Letter.

The idea of this game is to try how many sentences can be spoken without containing a certain letter which has been agreed upon. Supposing, for instance, the letter "F" is not to be introduced, the first player might ask, "Is this a new game to you?" The second player could answer, "Oh, no! I played it years ago, when quite a youngster."

He would perhaps turn to the third player and ask, "You remember it, do you not?" The third player might answer, "Yes, but we used to play it differently." This player, having used a word with an "F" in it, must pay a forfeit and remain out.

The answers must be given at once without hesitation, and the player who avoids for the greatest length of time using a word containing the forbidden letter wins the game.

The Little Purchaser.

A pound of hops!
And I looked in surprise
At little black Rose
With her shiny eyes.
A pound of hops!
She murmured said,
A pound of hops!
And she looked her head.
But, my dear,
We've flour and sugar in lump
And peanuts,
But never a pound of hops.
We've walnuts and chestnuts
And corn that pops.
Oh, oh, I forgot!
It's a pound of hops!

My Uncle's Story

By A. B. SEARLE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

What a change half a century has made in methods of travel! In 1850 to reach New York from Cincinnati, then the Queen City of the West, one might go a part of the way by steamboat, another by stagecoach and the balance by canal. In such conveyances people were thrown together intimately, and lifelong friendships were often made. The passenger canalboat was the first to pass out of use, and there are few living who remember it as a method of travel.

It was in 1845 that one of these passenger canalboats was being dragged along by a horse on the towpath. There were no staterooms, only berths something like those on a modern sleeping car. Between these was the cabin, where the passengers lounged during the day and evening. At that time the professional gambler worked in the narrow channels of the period. He was on the steamboat, but did not disdain the canalboat. On this canalboat a portion of the bow had been cut off, and in it were card tables. At one of these tables sat a professional gambler feeling a youngster of twenty.

That youngster was my uncle, and I got the story I am about to tell from him. He had been deputed to carry some $8,000 from Pittsburgh to Harrisburg. How the gambler knew that he had the money with him he did not learn. My uncle played with the sharper till he had lost all the money that had been given him for his expenses, then began to play with his trust fund. He quit at 11 o'clock at night, having lost half of the $8,000.

The next morning was Sunday. A service was held in the cabin conducted by a clergyman slightly past middle age. My uncle was much impressed with his appearance and the fervor with which he spoke. His accent was that of the southerner. My uncle said that the clergyman attacked gambling, telling a number of interesting, many of them pathetic, incidents, in which some foolish person had been robbed of all he possessed. In these stories the speaker showed an intimate knowledge of all forms of swindling at cards. He was looking straight at my uncle while he talked and seemed to be speaking to him personally.

Then my uncle remembered that while playing with the gambler he had seen the clergyman standing among those overlooking the game.

Notwithstanding that it was Sunday my uncle was eager to renew the play, hoping to win back what he had lost. He argued that to lose any part of the fund with which he had been entrusted would ruin him the same as if he lost the whole. Therefore Sunday afternoon he proposed to the gambler that they go to their curtained space for more play. The gambler, who knew well enough that the youngster would be after him, assented, and they were seen at play.

Of course my uncle lost miserably. His last thousand dollars was slowly melting away when he should walk in but the clergyman. He stood looking at the game for awhile, then said to my uncle, "Boy, you can't play with this man. He's a professional gambler and is playing with marked cards."

Picking up one of the cards lying on the table face down, the speaker, rubbing his thumb on it, said, "The king of clubs." Then, turning it over, his prophecy proved correct. In the same way he told the value of other cards. They were all provided with minute points that could be felt, but not easily seen. Then, turning to the gambler, he said, "Give the boy the money you have won from him."

The gambler put up a vigorous bluff. "What you got to do with this business, anyway? You're a person and don't know any more about cards than a mule. You just get out of here or I'll find a way to put you out."

"How much has he won from you, boy?" asked the clergyman of my uncle.

"Seven thousand dollars."

"Give me what you have left. The only way I can get your leg back for you from this man is to win it at his own game. There's honor among thieves. He won't do it one way, but he will another."

My uncle turned over a few hundred dollars he had left. The clergyman sat down, a new pack of cards was brought out, and at it they went. At the end of an hour the clergyman had recovered $5,000. At the end of the second hour he had lost $500. At the end of the third hour he had regained all but $500 of my uncle's loss, and in half an hour more he had won every cent the gambler had taken. He showed his winnings over to the boy he had saved from ruin.

"There's only one man that can get the better of me on any game of cards," said the gambler, "and I haven't seen him for eighteen years."

"Warren Phillips?"

"Yes."

"That's my name."

The gambler looked at him in astonishment.

"Yes; I was one of the professionals in those days, though I never played any but a fair game. But I quit it and now look upon it with horror. I ran for years on the Prairie Belle and won a lot of money. It's all now in church-estates."

And that's the way my uncle was saved.

The Change of a Letter.

At the period when British Columbia was threatening to withdraw from the Dominion of Canada because the Caribou settlement had been ignored by the Mackenzie administration the late Lord Dufferin took part in a public function in Quebec. While the procession was moving through the principal streets a gentleman, breathless with excitement, hurried up to his excellency's carriage to say a "rebel" arch had been placed across the road so as to identify the viceroys with the approval of the disloyal inscription thereon. "Can you tell me what words there are on the arch?" quietly asked Dufferin. "Oh, yes," replied his informant; "they are 'Caribou Terms or Separation.'" "Send the committee to me," commanded his excellency.

"Now, gentlemen," said he, with a smile, to the committee, "I'll go under your beautiful arch on one condition. I won't ask you to do much, and I beg but a trifling favor. I merely ask that you alter one letter in your motto. Turn the S into an R—make it 'Caribou Terms or Reparation'—and I will gladly pass under it." The committee yielded, and eventually Dufferin contrived to smooth over the difficulties and to reconcile the malcontents.

Odd Street Names.

In Clerkenwell, England, there is a street called Picked Egg walk. It takes its name from Picked Egg tavern, which formerly stood there and made a specialty of serving pickled eggs. An interesting London thoroughfare is Hanging Sword alley, which is mentioned in Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities." London has also Pickleiering street. In Leicester is a street called Galloway Tree Gate. Hull has a street with the extraordinary name the Land of Green Ginger. Corydon has a street named Pump Hall, and there some years ago lived Peter Potte, a dealer in furniture. The most daring of farce writers might well have hesitated to invent a combination at name and address so improbable as that which really belonged to Peter Potte of Pump Hall—St. James' Gazette.

Squaring the Circle.

The origin of the problem squaring the circle is almost lost in the mists of antiquity, but there is a record of an attempted quadrature in Egypt 500 years before the existence of the Jews. There is also a vision, according to Hone, that the problem was solved by a discovery of Hippocrates, the geometer of Chios—not the physician—500 B. C. Now, the efforts of Hippocrates were devoted toward converting a circle into a crescent, because he had found that the area of a figure produced by drawing two perpendicular radii in a circle is exactly equal to the triangle formed by the line of junction. This is the famous theorem of the "lines of Hippocrates" and he, like gamblers' suits out of the philosopher's stone, an example of the useful results which sometimes follow a search for the unsolvable.
